He was on his way back to resume his post, having been on a flying visit to New York to retell his wife who had been spending a year at home. Mrs Ramsay was a very pretty little thing, with pleasant manners and a sense of humour. The Consular Service is ill-paid, and she was dressed always very simply; but she knew how to wear her clothes. She achieved an effect of quiet distinction.Â But our author is not without criticism of Mr. Kelada. Mr. Kelada, despite being a well-travelled man, and apparently cultured, ignores the cultural norms of the narrator and acts in a manner that brings ill feelings upon himself: Â He talks too much. Â He acts with ill manners when he doesnâ€™t use the term â€œMisterâ€ to address the narrator as is expected between two total strangers. The second man's name is Hugo. That is all Coke knows about him. Masters knows where and who Hugo is. but Coke doesn't. Every night Coke lies in bed and thinks about Eric Masters and Hugo. There is another thing he thinks about, too.Â The man in the field does not know. There is only one idea in his mind at the moment: he must find food and some warm clothes, but where? Two hundred miles away in London. Baxter's train is standing at platform 9 in Paddington Station. A man who wears a costly dress is necessarily a man of lavish habits. On the other hand, a man who wears tattered clothes is not necessarily a man of miserly habits. He may be do so only due to his financial limitations. Yet it is true that in some cases dresssserves as a useful index to the character of a man. Some common examples, from which we can get some idea of a manâ€™s character from his dress, are given below. We daily come across such persons as put on clothes of loud colours. We find them dressed in gaudy colours. They wear bushshirts printed withThe faces factors and actresses. So, is

Many years ago there was an Emperor who spent all his time and money on dressing up in expensive clothes. He loved riding round in his wonderful garments so that everybody could see him. He didn't care about his country very much because he was more interested in what was in or out of fashion. His palace was full of wardrobes containing clothes he had worn only once. One day two dishonest men appeared at the palace and said they could make beautiful clothes, which had magical properties. And the man showed him the different colours and patterns of the material as if they were in front of his eyes. The minister blinked and could still see nothing. Goodness!
