Teachers use four patterns of practice to involve students in meaningful, functional, and genuine language-learning activities: literature focus units, literature circles, reading and writing workshops, and thematic units. 3. Literature Focus Units Teachers and students read and respond to one text together as a class or in small groups. They use the six language arts as they participate in activities and demonstrate learning. Although content-area textbooks may be used, they are only one resource. Students also identify topics they want to study, so thematic units are authentic learning opportunities.
