Snow White is the titular protagonist of Disney's first animated feature-length film, Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs. She is a young princess; the Fairest of Them All, whose beauty is defined by her inherent kindness and purity. Shortly after finding love in a charming Prince, Snow White learns that her jealous stepmother, The Evil Queen, is determined to kill her. Snow White forcibly runs away from home to escape the queen's wrath, but finds shelter in the cottage of seven dwarfs. Now a refugee Snow White, imprisoned daughter of the late king, escapes just as the Magic Mirror declares her the source of the Evil Queen's immortality. The Queen sends her men, led by a local huntsman, to bring her back. But upon her capture, the huntsman finds he's being played and turns against the Queen's men, saving Snow White in the process. Meanwhile, Snow's childhood friend, William, learns that she is alive and sets off to save her. Written by G.C. Bendixen. Snow White in New York

Central to the orientation of this book is a view of literacies, learning and teaching as completely interconnected social processes. As the theoretical and research bases for this position became more established in the 1980s and 1990s, some tertiary textbooks (Unsworth 1993d) dealt with the detailed practical classroom ramifications of these theoretical understandings about the social construction of literacies. While there is a strong and continuing consensus about the more 'socially responsible practices in literacy pedagogy explicated at the time, the parameters of school literacies have been significantly extended with the rapid cultural and technological changes in literate forms of communication in recent years. Predominant among these are the growing impact of images in an increasing range of texts and the shift from page to screen-based literacies. Learning materials in school subject areas are changing, texts of popular culture are being seen as important curriculum resources and traditional resources like children's literature are being influenced by intermodal comparisons and transformations. There have been some useful publications dealing separately with some issues arising from these changes. However there remains a need to address the bi-directional impact of research and practice from the perspectives of both beginning and experienced classroom teachers. Teachers are looking for a coherent and practical framework for classroom work, which consolidates fundamental aspects of traditional literacy pedagogy and also encompasses the multiliteracies competencies that children will need to negotiate in the new millennium. This book extends the trajectory of the 1993 edited work, Literacy Learning and Teaching: Language as Social Practice in the Primary School (Unsworth 1993d), to attempt such an enterprise, focusing on primary and junior secondary schooling. There are three broad stages in the structure of this book as indicated in Figure 0.1. Framing perspectives in Chapter 1 introduces sociocultural, semiotic and pedagogic perspectives on key issues in literacy learning and teaching and emerging dimensions of change. It addresses the theoretical and practical bases of contemporary literacy pedagogy and foreshadows the subsequent chapters explorations of both consolidation and transformation in the development of a pedagogy of multiliteracies. to charge into the inferno when two suit-coated figures ran over to them. One was Mr. Johnson, the Human Submarine, and the other was Mr. Grace. They were talking hard and fast to the fire chief. Great rolls of hose with shiny nozzles were being unreeled from the pumpers and dragged toward the front doors. The fire chief turned around and yelled, Hold it! They stood irresolutely on the lawn, their nozzles gripped and held out before them like comic brass phalluses. The fire chief was still in conference with Mr. Johnson and Mr. Grace. Mr. Johnson pointed at Room 16. Thomas Denver, the Principal with the Amazing Overshaved Neck, ran over and joined the discussion. It was starting to look like a pitcher s mound conference in the last half of the ninth. I want to go home! Irma Bates said wildly. Blow it out, I said. The fire chief had started to gesture toward his knights again, and Mr. Grace shook his head angrily and put a hand on his shoulder. He turned to Denver and said something to him. Denver nodded and ran toward the main doors. The chief was nodding reluctantly. He went back to his car, rummaged in the back seat, and came up with a really nice Radio Shack battery-powered bullhorn. I bet they had some real tussles back at the fire station about who got to use that. Today the chief was obviously pulling rank. He pointed it at the milling students. Is it all right to do homework? Melvin Thomas asked tremblingly. There was a general laugh. They seemed surprised to hear it. Go ahead. I thought for a moment and added: If you want to smoke, go ahead and do it. A couple of them grabbed for their pockets. Sylvia Ragan, doing her lady-of-the-manor bit, fished a battered pack of Camels delicately out of her purse and lit up with leisurely elegance. She blew out a plume of smoke and dropped her match on the floor. She stretched out her legs, not bothering overmuch with the nuisance of her skirt. She looked comfy. There had to be more, though. I was getting along pretty well, but there had to be a thousand things I wasn t thinking of. Not that it mattered. If you ve got a friend you want to sit next to, go ahead and change around. She immediately stepped into the wardrobe and got in among the coats and rubbed her face against them, leaving the door open, of course, because she knew that it is very foolish to shut oneself into any wardrobe. Soon she went further in and found that there was a second row of coats hanging up behind the first one. It was almost quite dark in there and she kept her arms stretched out in front of her so as not to bump her face into the back of the wardrobe. She took a step further in - then two or three steps always expecting t Adventure, family, fantasy.
