While science fiction writers expressed the dreams and nightmares of the era in pulp print, real-life rocket engineers worked, often in secrecy, on making space travel reality. The imaginations of many cold war scientists were fed by science fiction literature - but not only from writers such as Arthur C. Clarke. The aerospace industry itself often promoted its future capabilities with fantastical, colorful visions depicted in its advertisements aimed at luring young engineers into its booming workforce." "In trade journals such as Missiles and Rockets and Aviation Week, something ne...Â "The shock of Russia's 1957 Sputnik satellite launch lit a fire in America to get a man into space and onto the Moon - the race was on, and the aerospace industry was hot. The result is Another Science Fiction, a document that is probably more revealing about the era than the collected articles in those same magazines, and certainly more entertaining. The overall impression is one of optimism and the expectation that science and technology will pave the way to a bright future.Â A superb book packed with tons and tons of very detailed artwork and adverts from the late 50s / 60s showing the space race and related companies. If you are into early 60s adverts (Mad Men etc) then this is the perfect book for the new frontier. Read more.
