Bridging the Culture Gap, written by two of Canning's most experienced trainers, is a distillation of many years' work and is based on the real-life business situations of their international clients. You'll find out how to deal sensitively with other cultures; mind your manners; avoid hidden dangers; get people to play ball; communicate with style; win the deal; and so much more. Whether you are planning to give a presentation to a cross-cultural group or about to negotiate with an overseas client, Bridging the Culture Gap will ensure that your cultural awareness antennae are well tuned. About the Authors. Penny Cartwright has been Canning's Research and Development Director since 1988.

Reading is also a particularly important area to address because so many American students struggle with this fundamental skill. More than six out of every 10 fourth graders in the United States are not proficient readers, and changes in reading scores for fourth and eighth graders have increased only slightly since 1992, according to the National Assessment of Education Progress. Natalie Wexler, author of "The Knowledge Gap," described some of the obstacles to getting the findings of cognitive science integrated into the classroom as matters of "head, heart, and habit." Teacher education programs tend to focus more on some of the outdated psychological models, like Piaget's theory of cognitive development, and less on recent cognitive science research.
