Uncover the haunted and ghastly in Washington, DC with these ghost tours that will have you delightfully spooked during the Halloween season.Â Capitol Hill Haunts dives into the disagreements among ghostly former lawmakers, dancing statues in the Statuary, a demon cat and the ghastly creeps that surround the Lincoln conspiracy trial. Tours run nightly, so there are plenty of chances to let DC's devilish past seep into your dreams.Â Ghosts of Georgetown takes you behind the symbols of the past that shroud the area, revealing the ghosts and spirits that have called Georgetown home for hundreds of years (there's also True Crimes of Wicked Georgetown for ages 14 and up). Youâ€™ll even get the inside scoop on curses, startling incidents and those infamous Exorcist steps. Though there are some seriously spooky haunted hotels out there, these ghost towns are almost more frightening. The abandoned cities stretch all throughout America, and are rumored to be extra eerie. But they werenâ€™t always that way. Most of them were once prosperous mining towns filled with people hoping to make it rich by discovering gold or silver.Â Not all of them are rumored to actually be haunted places, but some do have spirits of former business owners or residents wandering around the general stores or old jails. Not all of them are totally defunct, either. One even apparently has an "internationally acclaimed" restaurant! Ready to plan your trip, or take a virtual one?
