Donald Sultan's large-scale still life paintings are filled with rich iconography—provocative objects, like bulbous fruits, set against a tar-black background. Although primarily classified as a still lifes, Sultan maintains that his works (despite their representational objects—flowers, lemons, eggs, buttons) are first and foremost abstract. Born in Asheville, North Carolina, Sultan moved to New York City in 1975 upon completion of his advanced studies. Donald Sultan was born in 1951, a remarkable figure of American New Image Painting. In the 1980s, Donald Sultan (born 1951) began his industrial landscape series the Disaster Paintings . He worked with the subject for nearly a decade, using images of actual events drawn from the daily newspaper. Sultan's Disaster Paintings illustrate robust, man-made structures—such as industrial plants and train cars—as fragile constructs that can be undone by catastrophic events.
