2011 Report from the Child Fatality Review Team. Understanding Child Injury Deaths. Michael R. Bloomberg Mayor. In 2006, to better understand unnatural deaths in children ages one to 12 years old and to identify strategies for injury prevention, New York City (NYC) established a multi-disciplinary Child Fatality Review Team (CFRT). This year's report of the CFRT presents an updated examination of trends in child injury deaths, integrating an overview of nonfatal child injuries, and a review of sleep-related injury deaths among infants younger than one year old. Improving Responses to Elder Abuse. NIJ funded a team of researchers to develop a computerized decision support system for elder abuse.[1] The Elder Abuse Decision Support System (EADSS) contains assessments for physical, sexual, and psychological abuse; neglect; and financial exploitation. In Phase 1, the team assessed infrastructure requirements and "end-user criteria" through an environmental and infrastructure scan. They held meetings with key informants from the Illinois Department on Aging, teleconferences with national experts, and focus groups and interviews with practitioners and local experts.
