Multicultural education seeks to achieve greater social harmony in a society and world currently beset by intercultural conflict. Based on an ideal of cultural pluralism, this does not mean that people must reject their ethnic identities but strike a compromise between cultural assimilation and cultural separatism or segregation. Being multicultural can lead to an increased perception of the equal human worth of all people and its acceptance as the norm of human experience (Samovar and Porter 1995). Choosing democracy: A practical guide to multicultural education (New Jersey: Merrill Prentice Hall). De Kadt, E. (1992). The article is an excerpt from Campbells book Choosing Democracy: A Practical Guide to Multicultural Education published in 2010. To me, this article fulfills a specific purpose in that it clearly describes how racism is still alive and well within our educational systems. It is only one of many articles a teacher could use to help students see all the ways racism can show up in our society and that racism is not only bigoted speech or action, but at times the withholding of fair treatment under the law and the withholding of opportunities the majority takes for granted. The fourth edition of Choosing Democracy continues to analyze the standards movement and high stakes testing, bringing this reform initiative up to date, as well as examining its effect on multicultural education. The text maintains its critical analysis of culture, race, class and gender as these apply to schools; and provides strategies, lessons, and resources for classroom use. His powerful text is the most comprehensive analysis we have of sharpening the practical strategies for multicultural education in America. The best of American life has always been embodied and enacted by courageous figures who chose democracy—from Thomas Paine, Harriet Tubman, César Chávez, Ronald Takaki, to Dolores Huerta.
