Prior to D-Day, the Allies conducted a large-scale deception campaign designed to mislead the Germans about the intended invasion target. In the months and weeks before D-Day, the Allies carried out a massive deception operation intended to make the Germans think the main invasion target was Pas-de-Calais (the narrowest point between Britain and France) rather than Normandy. Later that day, more than 5,000 ships and landing craft carrying troops and supplies left England for the trip across the Channel to France, while more than 11,000 aircraft were mobilized to provide air cover and support for the invasion. Cover shows LCTs with 13/18th Hussars and their Sherman tanks on board about to set off for Normandy. Operation Neptune was a combined British and United States undertaking by all Services of both nations, assisted by their Allies, whose object was to carry out an operation from the United Kingdom to secure a lodgement on the Continent from which further offensive operations can be developed. The weather had not been on the side of the Allies yet the landings had succeeded and a firm beachhead had been established. what was the scale of enemy resistance to allied naval activity? The landings were the first stage of Operation Overlord - the invasion of Nazi-occupied Europe - and aimed to bring an end to World War Two. By night-time, around 156,000 Allied troops had arrived in Normandy, despite challenging weather and fierce German defences. At the end of D-Day, the Allies had established a foothold in France and within 11 months Nazi Germany was defeated. Here are 10 things you may not have known about the operation: 1. Photography appeal. As early as 1942, the BBC launched a bogus appeal for photographs and postcards from the coast of Europe, from Norway to the Pyrenees

Planning for D-Day began more than a year in advance, and the Allies carried out substantial military deception -- codenamed Operation Bodyguard -- to confuse the Germans as to when and where the invasion would take place. The operation was originally scheduled to begin on June 5, when a full moon and low tides were expected to coincide with good weather, but storms forced a 24-hour delay.

Normandy had excellent landing beaches, was less fortified than Calais and was still within fighter aircraft range. "This operation is planned as a victory, and that's the way it's going to be. Operation Neptune: The D-Day Normandy Landings. Background. The D-Day invasion of Normandy was necessitated by the overwhelming dominance of Nazi Germany over Continental Europe. As can be seen in the map given below, every country in Europe apart from the Soviet Union and neutral states was either allied with or controlled by Hitler. The region representing Nazi Germany included the annexed German-speaking Czechoslovakian states of Bohemia and Moravia (Sudetenland), Austria, which was annexed to Germany after the Anschluss, and annexed areas of Poland.Â Allied countries in Europe included the United Kingdom and its territories and the Soviet Union. And the neutral countries included Turkey, Sweden, Switzerland, Ireland, Spain, and Portugal. Operation Neptune: The D- has been added to your Cart. Add gift options.
