Abstract "Practical theology" has recently emerged as a distinctive approach to the theological task. It is concerned with the way theological task. It is concerned with the way theological activity engages wider social, cultural, and ecclesial issues. Rather than seeing itself as a "branch" of theology, practical theology is a distinctive theological, sensibility that highlights the ever-present need to "read the signs of the times" in the light of the Gospel message and the Christian tradition. Veling begins his work by sketching the main contours of practical theology. He proceeds to explore some of its key elements (interpretation, context, scripture, tradition) before reflecting on the deeper role of theology in church and society.

Heaven, the third one, the one God lives in, is perfect. Satan is in a completely different heaven still invisible, but where there is wickedness. We are praying in that Matthew 6:9–10 that God should make the righteousness of God in heaven reign on this earth, to fulfill prophecies and to reward the righteous ones of God. We are seeing that Satan's institutions, driving evil in this world, are going to be destroyed. , Retired psychiatrist. Also studied philosophy and theology. It was God's intention that Heaven and earth continue to coexist like this, however, the fall of man made that impossible. When mankind chose sin over God, the earth became a ruined and imperfect place. God's realm, being perfect and purely holy, was no longer able to coexist within our realm, and Heaven and earth were driven apart. Thankfully, God had a plan to bring them back together.Â

Everywhere on earth that Christ visited, He brought little pieces of Heaven with Him, and though mankind ultimately killed Him, His death created a permanent access point between Heaven and earth. Today, Christ intercedes on our behalf and allows us to approach the throne of God whenever we desire through prayer.Â

The Gospel of John and Christian Theology. Richard Bauckham. In heaven above, seraphim flew before God in the heavens, singing, "Holy, holy, holy is the Lord God of hosts; the whole earth is full of his glory!" (Isa. 6:3); angelic creatures flew before him, calling to one another, "Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord God Almighty, who was and is and is to come!" (Rev. 4:8). The worship that began and failed with Adam is restored with Israel and Solomon, at least partially. Though imperfect, Israel and Solomon's worship is acceptable to God because it's their response within a gracious arrangement—the covenant of grace. Yet the worship of God, as originally intended in Eden, and progressively restored by Israel and Solomon, is never perfected or fully realized. As it is in heaven. The thought is true of the order of the visible heaven, where law reigns supreme, with no "variableness or shadow of turning." But seeing that the obedience contemplated is that of the will, it is better, perhaps, to think of the words as pointing to the unseen hosts of heaven, the ministering angels, and the spirits of just men made perfect. That all wills on earth should be brought into the same entire conformity with the divine will as theirs, is what we are taught to pray for.Â

This is the practical moral necessity in the life of believers, which, with its ideal requirements, is to determine and regulate that life until the fulfilment of the second petition shall have been accomplished.
