From Red Land, Black Land: Daily Life in Ancient Egypt by Barbara Mertz. "Setting up a household was a proper adult activity. A man needed to beget sons to carry out his funeral ceremonies and see that his spirit was provided with food and drink. This is the formal reasoning, but it would be absurd to suppose that it was the only reason why the ancient Egyptians got married. We don't know how often marriages were arranged by parents, but there was no seclusion of the female, and in some cases at least a boy and a girl married because they had fallen in love.
