Flashcards.Â Research is a systematic search for answers to questions using a clearly specified process for gathering and analyzing data. It is empirical (i.e., derived from experiment, observation, or experience). What are the three interrelated phases of research? 1. Planning- Determine the issues and research questions; select measures; select an appropriate design; develop a data collection strategy and instruments 2. Doing- Gather the data; analyze the data; verify the accuracy of the data and analysis; and formulate the findings. vi Edinburgh Business School Research Methods for Business and Management. Many examples of research concepts that are relevant to public administrators make the book extremely useful for students and practitioners alike." - - William Leavitt, Old Dominion University. "This is the consummate methods survey text for public administration and policy study, somehow improved in the new edition over already superlative previous ones. In the new edition, conceptual frames continue to be covered with even greater nuance and depth--topics such as policy and program complexity, complex causation, logic modeling, the inter-relation of normative and descriptive/empirical questions in public sector research, research ethics, and the refinement of research questions in these contexts, for instance translating research questions into hypotheses.
