If you want to write poetry, start by reading poetry. You can do this in a casual way by letting the words of your favorite poems wash over you without necessarily digging for deeper meaning. Or you can delve into analysis. Dissect an allegory in a Robert Frost verse. Ponder the underlying meaning of an Edward Hirsch poem. Retrieving the symbolism in Emily Dickinson's work. Do a line-by-line analysis of a William Shakespeare sonnet. Creative writing course, session 7: The basics of how to write poems – lyric versus narrative, structured versus free verse, rhythm and meter. Almost invariably, poems arrive in the form of words, not ideas. I don't think poets get ideas for poems, they get words; that's their gift. Of course, that gift can co-exist with a gift for fiction. And it can lie dormant in a writer who hasn't realised it's there.
